Fall Graduate Course 16:560:668 (3 credits)

Wednesdays 3:50-6:40 (AB 5050)
Taught by: Professor Carmela Scala

This course provides an analysis of the successful strategies used to effectively teach a second language, both in the traditional face-to-face class and online (synchronous/asynchronous and remote). We will begin by exploring the different theories and approaches to second language acquisition and then move to the 'practical application' of those theories. Students will develop the ability to critically assess current methods, materials and techniques for teaching a second language. All strategies and methodologies are applicable to every language so students from various language departments are welcome.
